Dr. Edward King, the venerated and saintly bishop of Lincoln, in England, is now much advanced in years and somewhat infirm. Recently he has been visiting Bournemouth for his health, and T. P. O'Conner in his M. A. P. tells the following story of the venerable prelate's visit to that seaside health resort: After resting for the parade the bishop desired to move, but, owing to his age and infirmities, found some difficulty in rising. A kind hearted little girl of the town noticed his trouble and ran up, saying, "Oh, let me help you."

The good bishop beamed upon the child with one of his sweetest smiles, and the smile of the bishop is very sweet indeed. "You are a dear little maiden," he said, "but I do not think you are strong enough." "Why, bless you, sir," was the reply,

"I've often helped up daddy when he was a sight worse drunk than you

Alma-Tadema.

Sir Laurence Alma-Tadema, who celebrated his sixty-sixth birthday recently, is the third artist from Holland who has been honored by an English knighthood. The others were Rubens and Vandyke. Sir Laurence, who has a keen sense of humor, is fond of telling a story bearing on his own knighthood. Shortly after he received the honor he and Lady Alma-Tadema gave an "at home." Everybody present was congratulating them, and one lady was very profuse. "Oh, dear Sir Laurence," she said, "I am awfully glad to hear of the honor you have received. I suppose now that you are knighted you will give up painting and live like a gentleman.'

How Book Buying Has Increased. Formerly the buying of a book was a matter of considerable importance. It was felt to be a bit of extravagance, an expenditure which was easily avoidable. Books could be borrowed or taken from a library. They were pleasant things to have about. They gave an air of refinement and intelligence to a room or a house. But it was easy to get along without them. People bought tickets for a concert, a lecture, for the opera or the theater, and thought it entirely legitimate to spend a little mon ey for recreation and refreshment When these same people thought of buying a book which cost no more than a single ticket to a concert and not half as much as a ticket to an opera they hesitated. They were not in the habit of buying books and they were in habit both of reading and buying books. It does not seem to them any Fond Parent-I wish, Bobby more extravagant to pay a dollar or a for a concert ticket.-Hamilton W. Ma bie in Ladies' Home Journal.
